Extracts. Bowarnilling Effects of Theatres. (Landon Review.) To come, bowerer, to the more important part of the subject. How is the thealre proved to be demoralizing? In the first place, we are bound to distrust the spirit of all this sort of criticism. It is oriticism with an ascertic inspiration. This would be denied by Mr. Beecher, but it is true. He is n very conneinated man for a teacher of (what he calls) Christianity; but he has not shaken himself free from a prejudice, distinctly ascetic, which has come down to us from the Orient through the foul and sullen channels of the dark and middle ages. Upon this particular isomething of the biting of the file in it. For a lates. large and fluent enjoying power is seldom found associated with a large teaching power, or leaning towards regulative conceptions as exclusive instruments of moral culture. These are only imperfect hints upon an exclusive subject. But. when it is said that the theatre demoralizes, we must ask-Demoralizes whom, and demoralizes. how? The bulk of the audience at a theatre are ordinary men and women; who are unconscious of any peculiar influence the theatre may have upon their lives; and not, assuredly, demoralized by it. There is not the slightest prefence for say. ing anything of the kind. With respect to the good repair, rent moderate. andience at a theatre, and comparing them with the select-portion of the audience at a church or chapel, i.e., the communicants, there is no reason to hesitate in allowing as much force ne it will carry to the fact that the ba lunge of certain kinds of self-restaint is in favour of the class of people who have taken religious rows upon themselves. But, in the first place, it must be asked of mon like Mr. Verandah, &c. suitable for a Family. Beecher and Mr. R. W. Dale, of Birmingham. who, in his " Week-day Sermone," has discussed the subject of amusements with rare candour. whether they do not, in their hearts, think it unfair, and, in the high sense, immoral, to permit so much leverage to these breaches of MIWO OFFICES in the Hongkong social order when, in the majority of the cases I smong the actors and actresses to whom the Hongkong Hotel Office. criticism points, the spirit of the moral law is to 648 Hougkong, 1st April, 1869. adhered to. In many cases, the divergence from social order amounts to no more than an equi valent for the difference between the recognized legalized, social institutions of certain States in America and Germany on the one hand, and those of England on the other. In other words, in the former the question of breach of social order would not arise, because the law is dif But tois is not the whole, or the chief par of the subject. Every vocation, every institution, every form of human association, has its own peculiar dangers. Now this is a common. tion of the War Department. place in itself, but we shall not permit the enemics of the theatre to ride off upon that. We shall sak, point blank, and press the question too, whether the dangers of this particular institution are greater than those of any other One of the most delicate and spiritual of living writers a lady whose Gough street, at present occupied by writings are much admired in America (especially by Whittier), bas boldly said that "the spiritual basis has even proved insufficient to bear up the whole man," and bag admitted the deplorable consequences of attempting to treat life as if it were sufficient. Now, to put the case briefly, does any one think would Ma Beecher or Mr. Dala contend-that all the evil of a particular kind which they associate with the stage from the beginning of time until now. has done the world as much harm as one single order of muse or monastics, or the writings of one single ascetio "Father Pr Neither Mr. tions—that in the Praya is detached, and con-Beecher nor Mr. Dale would, we think, deny moral fogs which have come down upon her in the shape of dark though impalpable traditions from the first lifteen centuries; and that one of our chief difficulties in dealing with certain forms of disorder arises from the confusion imported into life by these traditions.

Not is this all. Is Mr. Becches, prepared t contend that from the moral point of view only. there are no such things as compensations? he prepared to maintain that meanness. sordidness. or intellectual insincority the neculiar vices of religious communities in gaph. ral-are less mischiov vas. taken in connection with the "ostensibilities" of the religious life, WITH IMMEDIATE POSSESSION,—than some other wrong things which may gather. We know, and could on the spot write out in detail, the answer which the Rev N. and the Rev. M. would write; but we have seen enough of the world to know linw they would feel; and we fearlessly back the answer, of their bearts against the answer of their heads. Let us consider. But, in one respect, into Offices or Chambers. he never concealed his disappointment with his new friends. Down to the closing years of his life, he had one passionate complaint to make of his fellows in religious association-namely that, in spite of all their organizations for charitable pur poses, he had seen nothing among known of trank and hearty kinduces and mutual lielp among actors and actresses. His partionlar phrase was, "There is no flesh and blood namong you"; and from this kind of language he never swerved, though he frequently got he never swerved, though he frequently got himself into trouble by it.
